

memorable messages™

your challenge

In a recent Corporate Visions survey, more than 75 percent of B2B marketers agreed that having a consistent process for creating messages was “important” or “very important” to their organization. But more than half admitted they don’t follow an established methodology.

Buying decisions happen in the future, long after your audience has heard your message. If your marketers aren’t equipped with the know-how to make that message compelling, insightful, and, above all, memorable, your prospects and customers will forget about you when it matters most.

53% of companies lack a well-established message development process for their campaigns and content.

what’s going wrong?

- No common foundation for how messages and content are created, and a lack of alignment with how prospects and customers make buying decisions.
- The inability to differentiate your solutions from competitors causes potential buyers to view you as a commodity provider.
- Conflicting messages from your marketing campaigns and sales teams result in stalled deals, fewer renewals, and an inability to upsell existing customers.

what if you could...

- ...create compelling messages and assets based on science, not guesswork?
- ...acquire new customers by disrupting their status quo?
- ...keep and grow more business with existing customers by reinforcing and defending your incumbent advantage?
